Excerpt from The Nineteenth Illinois: A Memoir of a Regiment of Volunteer Infantry Famous in the Civil War of Fifty Years Ago for Its Drill, Bravery, and Distinguished Services

At a Regimental Reunion of the Nineteenth Illinois Volunteer Infantry, held under the auspices of the Regiment's Veteran Club, in Memorial Hall, Chicago, October 13 and 14, 1911, it was unanimously voted to have something in the way of a History, or Memoir, of the old organization prepared and published as soon as possible. The following comrades were present at this meeting: Company A - John E. Vreeland, James Gaffney, John Q. Fergus, Robert R. Sampson, James Bloomfield, Joseph M. Spahn, and J. F. Nelson; Company C - James C. McElhose, Frank Applebee, John Ives, and Miles Martin; Company D - J. Henry Haynie, and John Marshall; Company E - David F. Bremner, John Young, David McArthur, Thomas King, and Thomas H. Agnew; Company F - A. F. Scharf; Company H - John Dedrick, C. Van Order, and John Mereer; Company I - D. B. Morehouse, Howard F. Beardsley, and Charles G. Heath; Company K - George Eckart, James Fenton, Andrew Burns, William H. Christian, Albert Heller, August Brinkman, and William Butler.

In the fraternal, yet animated, discussion which prevailed it was stated that such a history had been contemplated from time to time. Finally, it was fittingly decided that a "Memoir" was a much desired purpose of thus Regimental Reunion, and, toward accomplishing this work, a committee of three were chosen to gather in all information possible. Comrade Haynie, of Company D, now a resident of Newton Center, Massachusetts, - this was his first attendance since the members of the Nineteenth have been holding these gatherings - offered his professional services in the carrying out of this commendable attempt; and, by taking the material thus secured, adding to the same his own researches, knowledge, and recollections, and putting the whole into proper shape for publication, both he and the Committee now have the great pleasure of submitting the results of their joint labors in the present volume.
